

Corona Cartoons – Connoisseur's Collection

Foreward

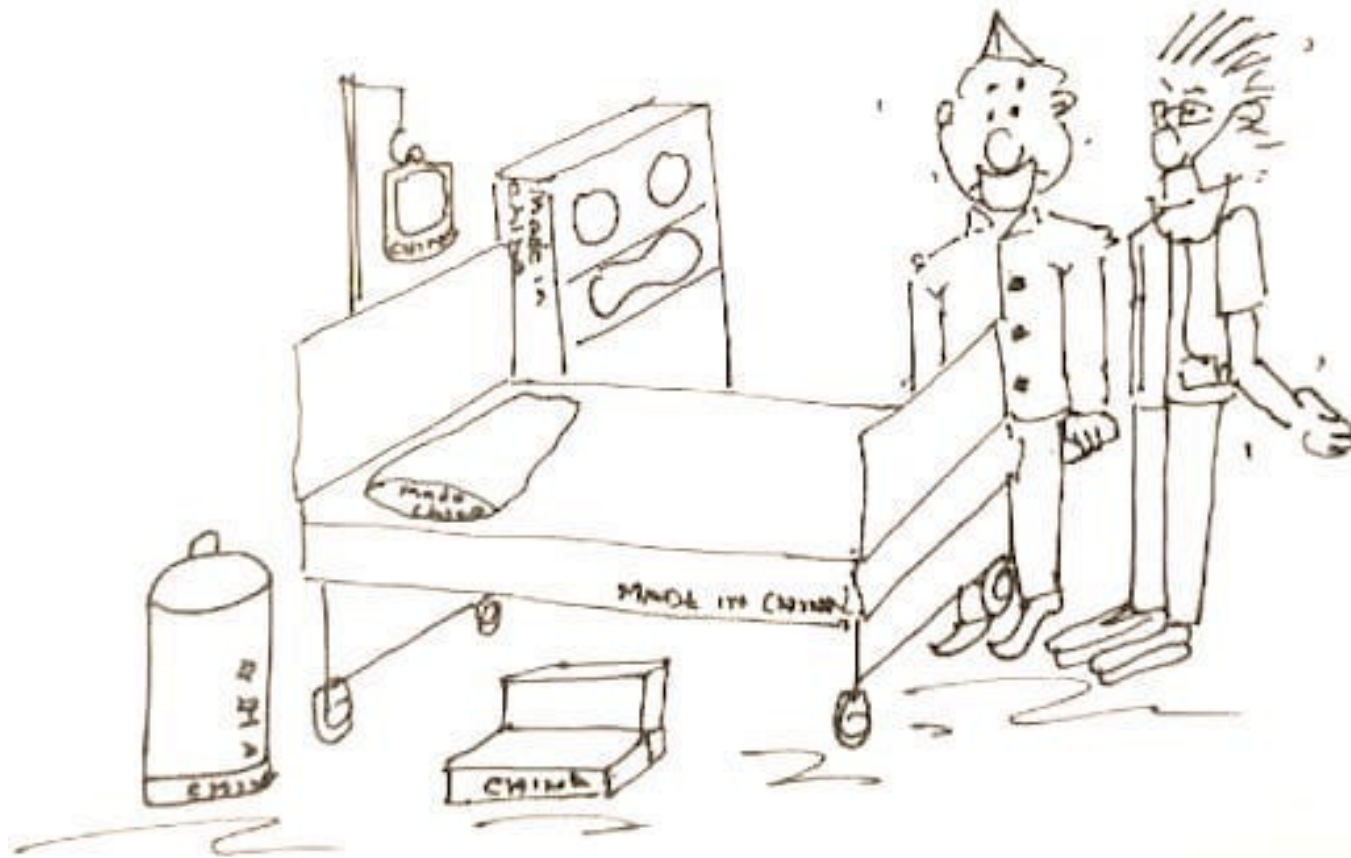

Words like coronavirus and COVID-19 were alien to us back in March 2020, and the emotions they evoked were fear, uncertainty and doom. Doctors had started exploring remedies like HCQs, Tocilizumab and Remdesivir. One wise man, however, very early on in the pandemic figured out that the medicine for this malady, at least in part, was going to be making people laugh.

Armed with his wit, imagination and creativity, Balki started doing something that has always come naturally to him - drawing cartoons. Sketched with an amazing regularity of almost one a day, they were shared with a group of his lucky friends. Seven months have whizzed by and we have witnessed multiple stages of lockdowns and unlocks, many with their own bizarre regulations. In these uncertain times we have been certain of only one thing – a cartoon from “cbalki” would land in our WhatsApp chat like clockwork and bring a broad smile to our faces. Some elders in the Coffee Club (CC) have been heard to remark that not all his cartoons were equally funny, but I disagree; each was as unique as it was pertinent to the prevailing situation.

With the diligence of the ace batsman that he is, Balki reached his century in July and was egged on by the CC members, who by then had gotten hooked on to the daily high. Crossing the enviable landmark of his 150th cartoon in late August, Balki simply took a fresh guard and carried his pen on. He reached an impressive milestone of 200 cartoons on October 21st, and cheekily announced that he would, from now on, sketch only occasionally. I am quite certain, though, that this veiled threat of retirement is akin to that voiced by some of his cricketing heroes. I am sure that our champion caricaturist shall soon return with more treats - to chants of “Baaalki..... Baaalki” from the CC. But till then, we shall simply have to thank our own RKL for the gift of this remarkable collection, and cherish it.
